EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Economic development organizations trying to attract, retain, or grow business and industry in their region must do so with limited resources. It is therefore important for these organizations to identify those businesses and industries that are most likely to succeed in their region. This allows the economic development organization to “target” its resources on those industries.

This study identifies “target” industries for the Marshall County Region (Ohio, Marshall, and Wetzel counties). Industries were identified as “target” industries through a multi-faceted approach. This multi-faceted approach included: personal interviews, employment growth trend analysis, wage analysis, industrial linkage analysis, as well as a focus group exercise. Personal interviews were conducted with business and community leaders throughout the Marshall County Region. These interviews were followed up by a detailed data analysis, which examined job growth by industry, high-wage industries, and significant import/export industries. The focus group exercise identified industries that were feasible to locate in the region, had better than average job growth coupled with well paying jobs, and that also met the development goals of the region.

The analysis yielded several industries or industrial clusters that have strong prospects in the Marshall County Region. The industries listed below have the strongest prospects in the region. The “target industries” for the Marshall County Region are:

- Back Office
- Health Care
- Destination Tourism/Retail (i.e. Tamarack)
- Clean Coal Power Plant
- Timber Related Industries (i.e. Engineered Wood Products)
- Training Centers
- High Technology (i.e. R&D, Aircraft Manufacturing, Carbon Foam)
- Chemicals (i.e. users of existing chemical plants)
- Warehousing
- Colleges and Universities

OVERVIEW

Economic development organizations trying to attract, retain, or grow business and industry in their region must do so with limited resources, both financial and time. It is therefore important for these organizations to identify those businesses and industries that are most likely to succeed in their region. This allows the economic development organization to “target” its resources on those industries. Target industry studies are often utilized by economic development professionals to assist in this effort. The Marshall County Commission and Regional Economic Development Partnership (REDp, formerly OVIDBC) have requested that a target industry study be completed for Ohio, Marshall, and Wetzel counties in West Virginia.

This study identifies “target” industries for the Marshall County Region (Ohio, Marshall, and Wetzel counties). Industries were identified as “target” industries through a multi-faceted approach. This multi-faceted approach included: personal interviews, employment growth trend analysis, wage analysis, industrial linkage analysis, as well as a focus group exercise. The Methodology section provides a summary of approach. The Target Industries section summarizes the findings, while more detailed summary tables from the analysis are presented in appendices.

METHODOLOGY

The target industry analysis used for this study went well beyond the analysis of data. Expertise of local business and community leaders was also key to the study’s findings. The analysis used for this study began with interviews of business and community leaders. These personal interviews were then followed up by a detailed data analysis. Finally, information resulting from the interviews and data analysis was brought together in a focus group exercise.

Personal Interviews

Business and community leaders were asked to identify those industries that they felt were viable for the Marshall County Region. This process was used to capture additional industries that should be considered, but that may not be strong prospects in the results of the data analysis. These industries were considered “feasible” or were thought to “fit the region.” The business and community leaders were also asked to identify strengths and weaknesses of the region in trying to grow existing businesses or attract new businesses. The quality of the workforce and the strong work ethic were often mentioned as one of the strongest assets to the region. The roads infrastructure, particularly Interstate 70, was also mentioned as a big benefit to the region. Worker’s compensation was the disadvantage most often discussed.

Data Analysis

The data analysis used for this study looked at several data sets and several key pieces of information. Summary tables from the data analysis can be found in Appendix A. Data used in the analysis include data from West Virginia Employment and Wages (unpublished data) and IMPLAN data tables covering what industries send materials out of the region (domestic and international exports) and what industries import materials from outside the region.

Unpublished data from the West Virginia Bureau of Employment Programs were used to identify industries with high employment, high wages, strong employment growth, strong wage growth, and/or strong establishment growth. Industries were ranked by these characteristics and were used in the subsequent focus group exercise.

Finally, data tables from IMPLAN were examined to identify large importing and exporting industries. Importing and exporting refer to both domestic and international imports and exports. These data provide information on industries that are importing significant amounts of materials, which may present an opportunity for locating the supplying industry in the region. These data also provide information on industries that are exporting their product outside the region. If the industry is exporting to another industry that is, in turn, further processing the exported good, then this may present an opportunity for locating the value-added industry in the region.

These datasets were analyzed for the Marshall County Region, West Virginia, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and the United States. Industries that showed stronger than average employment growth and/or high wages were considered for further analysis in the study. Industries with significant imports or exports were also considered as potential target industries.

Focus Group Exercise

Information from the personal interviews and the results of the detailed data analysis were brought together in a focus group to narrow down the list of industries into a manageable list of “target industries.” Industries can be thought of to fit into one of three categories. The first was the “Feasibility or Fit.” This is the list that resulted from the personal interviews with business and community leaders. Second, “High Performance” industries are those industries that have shown strong employment growth or high wages. These industries were identified through the detailed data analysis mentioned above. Third, are those industries that meet the “Development Goals” for the region.

Industries needed to fit all three criteria to be “target industries.” The focus group exercise was meant to bring information together from the personal interviews and the data analysis, along with the expertise of the business, community, and political leaders attending the focus group. The focus group exercise identified what industries met the “Feasibility” and “High Performance” categories, while also meeting the “Development Goals” for the region. Figure 1 shows the Venn diagram used in the focus group exercise to help identify the target industries. Target industries provided in this report were thought to be in all three categories (section A of the diagram). If an industry does not make the list of target industries, it may still be a viable industry for locating in the industry. Industries that are in sections B, C, and D are also important industries to consider, but those in section A have the advantage of meeting all three criteria.

Identifying Target Industries

TARGET INDUSTRIES

The target industries listed below are the result of the personal interviews, detailed data analysis (High Performance industries – Appendix A), and the focus group exercise. The following industries were the most common list of preferred industries or “target industries” for the Marshall County Region:

- Back Office
- Health Care
- Destination Tourism/Retail (i.e. Tamarack)
- Clean Coal Power Plant
- Timber Related Industries (i.e. Engineered Wood Products)
- Training Centers
- High Technology (i.e. R&D, Aircraft Manufacturing, Carbon Foam)
- Chemicals (i.e. users of existing chemical plants)
- Warehousing
- Colleges and Universities

Note: += Services commodities in this table include not only commodities in the services industry but also those in the information industry.

* = A missing rank indicates the imports of the commodity made by industries were zero or less than $10,000. This means most or all imports of the commodity were by institutions, not for further production but for final consumptions.
